Secret Underground Railroad Tunnel Discovered at Tubman May Rewrite History

By BONNIE DALY

Northup Police discovered a secret tunnel on campus yesterday that is believed to be part of the Underground Railroad. Police received a tip from a private investigator working the unsolved cold case of the 1995 murder of Max Cahill, Dean of the History Department.

The secret entrance to the tunnel was found behind a bookcase in a basement office of the Meachum Building. The tunnel travels about 15 feet underground and connects to a drainage pipe emptying into the Dale River. Not only do police believe the discovery can help an unsolved case, historians believe it may also rewrite American History.

When contacted for comment, Professor Emeritus Arthur Hodges, Cahill's replacement and long-time dean of the history department, was delighted at the news. "This is a highly significant finding and an incredibly important discovery for the college, the local community and quite frankly, for history itself."

The tunnel is currently considered a crime scene, but Professor Hodges is seeking immediate access for himself and a group of distinguished historians to conduct a thorough exploration of the space. "It is my great hope that we will get a chance to unearth priceless historical artifacts and information concerning the Underground Railroad before the police inadvertently destroy everything." Professor Hodges said.

The secret entrance to the tunnel is located in the same building where Dean Cahill was murdered on October 26th, 1995. The newly appointed 29-year old dean was alone in the locked building, working late, when someone apparently used the secret tunnel to enter the building and murder him. The case was closed several decades ago, without a conviction, as police were unable to ascertain how the killer gained entry to the building.

When questioned, Detective Anthony Sayer of the Northup Police Department said, "We're hoping the investigator who tipped us off to the hidden tunnel will continue to support our efforts to put whoever committed this heinous crime behind bars. Now that we know how the killer got in, we're confident justice can finally be served and this unsolved case file can be put to rest."

Additional Food Options Coming to Student Union

By Abe Haruki Tubman Times

Students will have a new variety of food choices starting in spring next semester after the new University Union project is finished and Paratore Dining Hall is renovated. According to Debra Jennings, the Director of Dining Services, these updates should be ready for next school year.

The new union, which will be located near Amsley Dining Hall, will contain a Smokey Joe's as well as Billybobs licensed store. Though Smokey Joe's has traditionally served alcohol, Jennings said the company was aware that this franchise wouldn't be permitted to sell it on campus and the

"It will be a great addition to the new and improved student union," Jennings said. "Food will be served."

As the university's current food provider, AGRO Foodsystems will hold the franchise rights to the Smokey Joe's and Billybobs. Jennings said this means students will be able to use money from their student spending card at both locations.

Jennings said the central food court in the new Union will be comparable to a stop on an Interstate Highway. She said there will be seating in the center of the dining area and the restaurants will be

School Council News: School Activities

Peer Review

Every 4 years the Department of Education and Training ensures each university in Georgia undergoes a review. At Tubman, this is happening again this year. The peer review is a process of ensuring that the school is achieving what we set out in our annual plan and that it is meeting the objectives of the Department of Education and Training.

The review process is scheduled to occur over 2 days in November and December and the results will be incorporated into our new annual plan. This process takes an enormous amount of preparation and work - a big thank you to all the individuals involved in the preparation and engagement of the
